asked to compare SQLite, MySQL and Oracle in terms of collation comparison full text search SELECT queries Our suggestions were:

SQLite: it's document-centric, very fast

MySQL: it's schema-centric, optimized for large tables, some kind of "must" indexing supported

Oracle: same as MySQL with extra features

We were asked to explain why we made these suggestions. We were also asked to elaborate on our analysis. I'd like to hear your suggestions as well.

A: Note that this is a subjective answer and is not based on objective standards. I'm going to start from the bottom.

it's document-centric I can't comment on Oracle, but I have found that SQLite is good for a document-oriented database. There are thousands of "application-level" frameworks, for example, for PHP, Java, Python, and Ruby.

it's very fast I can't comment on Oracle. I don't use it. MySQL's performance is generally fine, but there are some areas where it is not as fast as it could be. I have heard of people having issues with it, and I have encountered this myself.

Carole Howard's 1993 entrepreneurial efforts have since been recognised with multiple awards and accolades, including the NSW Volunteer of the Year award, a Public Service Medal from the NSW Judicial Service Commission and an Order of Australia Medal. Carole Howard says she has no plans to discontinue In Good Company, the non-profit organisation she founded on the Central Coast of NSW in 1993. In Good Company is now an organisation with nine programs that provides physical, emotional and financial support to vulnerable women and children who are transitioning out of or in out-of-home care. Its services are of paramount importance to the residents of Hunter, Newcastle and the Central Coast regions. “Yes, we will continue, but we will need more funding. We have taken from things that were given to us and we have made it work for those in need,” Howard says. “We are working on the Ecosystem concept
